War and Peace

I talked with Wax, my neighbor, about the boon of peace; the work of gun and saber, we both agreed, should cease. "There is no sense in fighting, in killing men," Wax said: "all wrongs men should be righting by peaceful means instead; but then the allied nations of peace were tired and sore, and hence these tribulations they simply honed for gore.' And then I preached some sermons, to show that Wax was wrong; "the blame rests with the Germans, with war machine so strong." One word led to another, until we came to blows. and Wax, that man and brother, I smote, upon the nose. He climbed mon my shoulders and and Wax, that man and brother, climbed upon my shoulders and loosened seven slats; and then we threw some boulders, old cabbages and cats. The peelers came and choked us and dragged us off to jail, and then the jurist Rev. Dr. Wood Discusses Duty of soaked us for quite a bunch of kale. And since that day I'm wiser: I talk of peace no more; I know how king and kaiser get mad and thirst for gore.
